Good day, good people.

Thank you for being a part of this milestone event as we celebrate 50 years of progress. It is incredible how this agency has grown and changed over the years having had just nine directors since 1972. This 50-year anniversary is a testament to our leadership throughout the years and to the thousands of dedicated men and women who served and continue to serve this agency with immense pride and great professionalism.

As the first female director of the Ohio Department of Rehabilitation and Correction, I am thankful to have been mentored by some of the directors who came before me. I've watched their visions come to life and I've witnessed their leadership skills bring about new generations of leaders to take the helm of the agency. The eight men who served in this role before me paved the way and laid a solid foundation for Ohio to continue to be one the most progressive correctional systems in the country.

The success of this agency is directly dependent upon the staff who do the work each day. It is because of our employees, people who are dedicated to the mending of lives, that we are able to do the important and impactful work that we do. I am fortunate and honored to serve as the director of an agency made up of people working as one team with one purpose and providing hope to those under our care.

As with anything in history, we’ve faced our share of challenges and changes, but our flexibility, perseverance and commitment to excellence stays as strong as ever.

The decisions we make each day will live well beyond our time and become part of history. The work we are doing right now is creating tomorrow’s history, and I can only hope that in my time as director I will be able to continue the legacy of leadership and excellence established by those before me.

Annette Chambers-Smith

Dr. Bennett J. Cooper started with the Ohio correctional system in 1957 as the Chief Psychologist at the Ohio State Reformatory in Mansfield. When the Ohio Department of Rehabilitation and Correction was formed in 1972, Governor John Gillian appointed him as the first director of the agency. He served as the director until 1974. He was the first African American director of a corrections agency in the country.

During his time as the director, he was a strong supporter of employee training and established the Ohio Corrections Academy on the grounds of the Chillicothe Correctional Institution. Education among the incarcerated population was also a priority for him. He established the Ohio Central School System in 1973 and was instrumental in establishing college courses offered by Ashland College. He was presented an honorary doctorate degree from Ashland College for his development of college degrees for the incarcerated population.

After his time as the director, Mr. Cooper remained active in the corrections arena. His legacy lives on today through the continued work of the National Association of Blacks in Criminal Justice – an organization for which he was a founding member.
In 1975, Governor James Rhodes named Adult Parole Authority Chief George Denton the director of the Ohio Department of Rehabilitation and Correction.

During his time as director, the state prison system grew by 84% and he helped shape an amendment to the state building fund to include corrections, allowing for planning to begin for the needed expansion and design of new prisons in Ohio.

He was an advocate for community programs, in fact, the Monday program in Montgomery County – still operational today – is a direct result of his efforts to obtain funding and pilot community programs.

Governor Richard Celeste appointed Richard Seiter, Ph.D., as the director of the Ohio Department of Rehabilitation and Correction in January 1983. At the age of 34, Seiter was the youngest director ever appointed in Ohio.

Dr. Seiter oversaw the construction of over 10,000 new prison beds, moving from the then-traditional telephone pole design to a modern campus-style design that included unit management and direct supervision in both design and operations.

Dr. Seiter established the Corrections Training Academy on the grounds of the Orient complex, and he started DRC’s long-standing tradition of correctional employee week and the correction officer of the year recognition. Under his leadership, the first female wardens were appointed at male facilities and opportunities were opened for women to become correction officers in male facilities.

Within the operations, he implemented a centralized classification system – replacing a subjective system that was done at each prison. He implemented risk-based parole guidelines, the first statewide collective bargaining bill, and opened specialized housing units focusing on areas such as mental health and substance abuse.

Dr. Seiter was known for his genuine concern of the DRC staff – he cared for their professional and personal well-being. His focus on staff built a solid foundation for professionalism among the employees of the agency.
George W. Wilson

George Wilson was appointed as the director of the Ohio Department of Rehabilitation and Correction in 1988.

In response to the significant growth of the agency, Director Wilson implemented the regionalization concept to help better manage prison operations within the agency. He made an impact in the area of hiring practices for women and minorities.

The DRC Employee Memorial and Recognition Park was dedicated under the direction of Director Wilson, a place still used today to honor and remember to work, commitment and sacrifice of the employees of DRC.

Reginald A. Wilkinson, Ed.D.

Reginald A. Wilkinson was appointed as the director of the Ohio Department of Rehabilitation and Correction in 1991. He served in this role for just over 15 years, making him the longest serving director of the agency.

Under Wilkinson’s leadership, the agency advanced in many areas. Staff development and recognition was a priority, and he established the executive leadership program, the DRC Gold Star Award and advanced education requirement for senior agency leadership. DRC was the first correctional system in the country to achieve the Golden Eagle Award for being fully accredited by the American Correctional Association.

During his tenure, the agency developed the “Ohio Plan for Productive Offender Reentry and Recidivism Reduction” – a foundation for the practice of successful release preparation and planning early during an individual’s period of incarceration.

Director Wilkinson established the Office of Victim Services, implemented the Prison Rape Elimination Act Standards, and encouraged community service with the agency logging millions of community service hours under his leadership.

His policies and practices put DRC on the map both nationally and internationally for best practices in areas such as substance abuse programming, restorative justice, and correctional education. Wilkinson has had significant impact and influence on professional organizations such as the American Correctional Association (past president), National Association of Blacks in Criminal Justice (founding member), Association of State Correctional Administrators (past president) and the International Corrections and Prisons Association (founding member and former vice chair, North America).
ODRC Directors

Terry J. Collins
2006–2010

In 2006, Governor Taft appointed Collins as Director of the Department of Rehabilitation and Correction. With a career expanding over three decades, Director Collins was undoubtedly known for his deep-rooted knowledge of the business and immense work ethic.

He was committed to staff working in the agency to exhibit integrity, leadership, accountability, and diversity and “I LEAD” became a centerpiece for his time as the director. His adage as the director was “Pieces of the Puzzle” – a methodical approach to operating the whole agency by ensuring all staff, customers and external stakeholders and partners had the ability to positively impact staff safety and successful reentry.

He embraced opportunities to educate all stakeholders that the agency was more than just prisons.

During his time as the director, it was not unheard of for him to show up unannounced at a prison on third shift to make rounds and spend time with staff.

Under his leadership, DRC filtered millions of dollars from prison operations to community correction programs to help communities divert appropriately low-level individuals from the growing prison system. In addition, several operational areas were centralized, mainstreamed, and consolidated to meet significant budget demands.

Collins’ relatable demeanor, passion for his work and extensive knowledge of the inner workings of the agency were unmatched.

Ernie Moore
2010–2011

Appointed in 2010 by Governor Ted Strickland, Ernie Moore holds the distinction of being the only agency director to start his career as a correction officer.

Following significant budget constraints which resulted in operational consolidations and efficiencies being implemented, Moore oversaw the agency during a time of regrowth.

A priority for Moore during his time as the director was to safely manage the growing prison population, and he established the agency’s WIG (Wildly Important Goal) to gain support from staff and stakeholders in this effort. Initiatives were put in place to help staff understand the direct and significant impact they had, not only on the lives of the incarcerated individuals, but also on the overall effort to reduce recidivism. He spent a great deal of time with external stakeholders, educating them on the global impact of a growing prison population and why their work in the criminal justice system was critical to safely reducing that number.

Because of his foundational experience as a correction officer, he had a unique ability to relate to the challenges staff were facing on a daily basis.
Gary C. Mohr

Appointed by Governor John Kasich, Gary C. Mohr became the director of the Ohio Department of Rehabilitation and Correction in January 2011. With a career in corrections dating back to 1974, Mohr’s experience included work in both the public and private sectors. One of his first acts as director was to streamline the agency mission: reduce recidivism among those we touch and vision: to reduce crime in Ohio.

Committed to safely reducing the prison population, Mohr spearheaded an initiative to provide resources to local communities to manage and treat low-level, often drug addicted individuals locally. He also established reintegration centers with a significant emphasis on release readiness and tools for successful reentry.

Under Mohr’s leadership, DRC leveraged the clinical expertise of the Ohio Department of Mental Health and Addiction Services to expand addiction and transitional services for incarcerated individuals who struggle with substance abuse disorders. DRC also established a partnership with the Ohio Department of Medicaid to pre-enroll individuals prior to their release from prison, establishing a continuum of healthcare within the criminal justice system in Ohio by connecting individuals to appropriate medical, mental health, and substance abuse services.

In 2016, Ohio was one of the first states in the country to be awarded the American Correctional Association’s (ACA) Lucy Webb Hayes Award. This distinguished award recognizes correctional agencies that have achieved full ACA accreditation and 100 percent compliance with the Prison Rape Elimination Act standards.

Annette M. Chambers-Smith

Annette M. Chambers-Smith was appointed as the first female Director of the Ohio Department of Rehabilitation and Correction in January 2019 by Governor Mike DeWine.

Director Chambers-Smith has made a multitude of value-based changes to the Ohio prison and parole system. She has established four core values for DRC: Take care of our staff; they will transform our offenders, One team, one purpose, Civility towards all, and Hope is job one.

Chambers-Smith has successfully put these values into motion among the staff and incarcerated population of Ohio. These values have been a catalyst to groundbreaking changes in the department. She created the Office of Employee Support Services and the Office of Diversity, Equity and Inclusion to provide holistic staff support and resources, as well as ensure a diverse workforce.

While keeping safety and security a top priority, she addressed racial bias among incarcerated persons by changing classification policies and instruments to remove practices and procedures which resulted in disparate outcomes.

Chambers-Smith believes in the philosophy of management by walking around. She spends a great deal of her time in the field and inside the prisons speaking to the staff who do the work each day and engaging with the incarcerated population. With this approach of listening to their ideas and suggestions, policies are developed based on the feedback of those closest to the work.

She has made family engagement a priority by revitalizing visiting rooms, establishing a family advisory council, and entering a contract with a new communications vendor which provides multiple opportunities for free communication per week.

Director Chambers-Smith reorganized the Adult Parole Authority in Ohio to create a safer system that focuses on successful reentry and decreased the overall caseload of parole officers. She places value on the important role that community corrections has in the overall criminal justice continuum. Much like an ecosystem, she believes the criminal justice system operates best when all parts work in concert to create the best opportunities to mend lives.
